In an age of diminished funding, the speaker will share his experiences of being hired as a writer/researcher in Africa in several different countries. Although graduate students and academics are primed to compete for competitive grant funding when preparing research trips abroad, in fact a paying market exists for their services in Africa itself. For those students who wish to maintain their ability to travel and do research in Africa over the long haul, the speaker will suggest alternative methods that they may not have considered.