The crossover between academic scholarship and journalism, whether through the publicizing of new research or as a result of the rising public profile of academics through their own media publications, poses a number of questions that panelists will address, including: interactions between academics and journalists, and the issues and potential consequences that may arise from these interactions; what are the responsibilities of academics and journalists in these engagements, to their fields, to one another, etc.; how might academics (including graduate students, who are assuming ever more public profiles) best prepare for these interactions?; questions of documentation of sources, etc.

Panelists:

Nathan Ensmenger, Associate Professor, School of Informatics and Computing

Ilana Gershon, Associate Professor, Department of Communication and Culture

Christoph Irmscher, Provost Professor, Department of English, and George F. Getz Jr. Professor in the Wells Scholars Program

Elaine Monaghan, Professor of Practice, Journalism, The Media School

Lea Shaver, Associate Professor, Robert H. McKinney School of Law, IUPUI

Moderator:

Deborah Cohn, Professor, American Studies and Spanish and Portuguese

Organized by American Studies and the History HTP workshop.