Anthropology's four-field approach has allowed researchers to explore human diversity in a multiplicity of ways. As we move into the 21st century, these varied approaches are increasingly challenging anthropologists to incorporate the strengths of other disciplines, especially through collaborative projects. This symposium will showcase the variety of projects pursued by scholars across disciplinary lines to better understand the human experience.