There is a long history of language contact between Spanish and Guaraní in Paraguay such that few natural, Paraguayan utterances are purely Spanish or Guaraní. In fact, Paraguayan speech has been characterized as a linguistic continuum of mixed Spanish-Guaraní use, called Jopará, that changes depending on the speaker, audience, or speech context. Although high levels of Guaraní use do not correlate positively with positive attitudes toward Guaraní, our understanding of Paraguayans’ language attitudes toward Jopará utterances is limited. The current study aims to investigate Paraguayans’ attitudes toward Jopará utterances and, further, the extent to which their attitudes vary in relation to the degree of Spanish-Guaraní mixed use.
