George Rehrey is a Principal Instructional Consultant with IUB's Center for Innovative Teaching and Learning, where he coordinates Indiana University's Scholarship of Teaching and Learning Program and advises and supports IUB instructors as they conduct classroom research, collect evidence of student learning, form communities of inquiry, apply for funding, and disseminate their work locally, nationally, and internationally. Each summer, along with his colleagues Lisa Kurz (CITL) and Eric Metzler (Kelley School of Business), George facilitates the Course Development Institute, where 40 faculty and graduate students participate in a 4-day intensive workshop to design or redesign a course of their choice. He also works with the Internationalization Collaborative Across Bloomington Project where he assists faculty on the internationalization of their courses. George's own SOTL work includes using taxonomies in gathering evidence of student learning, documenting how student-generated visual products can promote student-centered learning, and investigating how reflective teaching and backward course design methods improve teaching and learning. George holds an MFA in photography from Ohio University and a M.Ed. in Instructional Design/Organizational Development from the University of Illinois.
