

Brenda Chalfin is an Associate Professor of Anthropology and an affiliate of the Center for African Studies and the Center for International Business Education and Research at the University of Florida. A specialist in Economic and Political Anthropology, she recently completed a book manuscript entitled Anthropologies and Sovereignities: Working the Neoliberal Frontier in West Africa examining the impact of neoliberal reforms on border controls and conceptions of national sovereignty in Ghana. Treating ports as sites of governmental innovation, her current research involves the comparative study of Rotterdam and Antwerp and focuses on the role of security mandates in the harmonization of trade practices and policies and the construction of risk within and beyond the maritime frontier. Dr. Chalfin has held fellowships at the Institute of Advanced Study in Princeton (2002-3) and the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars (2006) and received research support from the National Science Foundation, Wenner-Gren Foundation and Fulbright. Her publications can be found in Current Anthropology, Comparative Studies in Society and History, American Behavioral Scientist, Africa, Development and Change and Identities.
