The film's main characters -- Anne Eenpalu, creator of the girl scout troop Daughters of Estonia, and ex-Miss Estonia Tiina Jantson, organizer of beauty contests for women and children -- would seem to embody opposing values and viewpoints. Yet the film, which takes the rare form of a documentary satire, leads the viewer to make a different conclusion. Its main characters have more in common than it may first appear. They are brought together by their very conservative notions about the role of women in society.
