Instructor: STEPHEN MACEKURA

This course will explore international, transnational, and international approaches to disciplines such as history, anthropology, political science, geography, and sociology. Topics covered from a global perspective include, but are not limited to, war and peace; neoliberalism; colonialism and post-colonialism; and global climate change. Students will investigate the many opportunities and challenges of different research methods, and the course will offer them an opportunity to explore both theoretical and methodological innovations that they can bring to bear upon their own research.
