

Hutton Honors Students with a Passion for the Life Sciences Invited to Sept. 17 Reception in the Kelley School of Business

If you are a Hutton Honors student with a passion for life sciences, you are invited to attend a Kelley Center for the Business of Life Sciences (CBLs) information session and reception, generously sponsored by WellPoint, Thursday, September 17, 5:30 – 7:30 p.m. in the Kelley school, CG 0034! As hors d'oeuvres and beverages are being served, please send your desire to attend to the CBLs e-mail account, lifesc@indiana.edu by September 14.

The Kelley School of Business Center for the Business of Life Sciences (CBLs) is holding an information session and reception for exceptional business students, law students and life sciences students at Indiana University who would like to explore applying to our Student Associates program. In attendance will also be our current group of exceptional “Student Associates,” our local corporate and university friends, and some faculty and administrators we may not currently know but we understand to have a keen interest in life sciences.

If you have achieved excellence in your academic career, we invite you to explore what we believe is an extraordinary opportunity to expand your knowledge regarding the business of life sciences by applying to the CBLs Student Associates program, which awards a Certificate in the Business of Life Sciences upon completion. Acceptance into this relatively new, rapidly growing program will afford you many opportunities to jump-start your career in the life sciences industry with opportunities to meet, network with, and be taught by leaders in the life sciences industry. In addition, you will work alongside other top-notch Indiana University students to collaboratively solve real-world problems as we all work together to bring the best of business and life sciences together!

If what you’ve read here is consistent with your preparation and your career plans, come hear what we have to say, get your questions answered, and meet other students and faculty who share your passion!

Here’s what one graduate Student Associate, Adam Shahrani, says: “I feel taking courses across department boundaries is a beginning step to address the industry need to communicate. As an informatics student, taking this business course has provided a perspective that scientists often do not experience, which is useful for informatics students in pursuing careers in both academia and life sciences companies.” Undergraduate biology student Alyssa Faughn says, “Combining the perspectives of business students and science students creates a very powerful collaboration.” MBA student Liz Kahling says, “My involvement with CBLs helped me land an internship with Abbott Labs because they saw that I was serious about the life sciences.”

To learn more about us and our Certificate in the Business of Life Sciences Student Associate program and other activities of the CBLs, please visit <http://www.kelley.iu.edu/cbls/>.

We hope to see you there!

---