This course will explore the political, social, and psychological functions of comedic news, with particular emphasis on The Daily Show with Jon Stewart and The Colbert Report. We will trace the historical roots of comedic news presentations from satirical newsvendors of 17th century English country fairs through the development of television. Particular emphasis will also be paid to the concept of folly as a uniquely and universally human way of adapting to our social world.