Professor Scott Shackelford

This course is designed to help make you a better business decision maker by enhancing your understanding of the environmental, social, legal, and economic dimensions of sustainable development, and your ability to evaluate sustainable business practices within a given regulatory framework. By the end of the course, you should gain a deeper sense of the important relationship between law, ethics, business, and the natural environment, and be able to think critically about how best to manage these relationships. The primary aim of the course is to provide students with a basic working knowledge of sustainability generally and environmental law and policy in particular, focusing on the United States but put in a global perspective. To accomplish this, students will undertake service-learning and research projects along with in-class simulations such as a tragedy of the commons game developed by the Wharton School of Business.
