Students study counseling theories and techniques for application to teaching. They learn methods of building community in the classroom, and ways to encourage student participation and respect for others. Students learn techniques and attitudes of group dynamics and leadership. Other topics of communication covered: conflict resolution, active listening, and parent-teacher communication.

Catherine Gray is the director of professional development and coordinator of distance education and teaches language education. She helps to facilitate the efforts of the School of Education to meet the ongoing educational needs of teachers and administrators currently working in the profession.