In this course, students will learn about the three primary alternative dispute resolution processes (negotiation, mediation and arbitration) and several hybrid processes. Case process selection and dispute system design will also be introduced, along with discussion of the issues and concerns about ADR. The course materials will be presented through lectures, readings, role-plays, case studies, in-class exercises and videotapes on the subject.

Nan Stager is a senior lecturer and the director of undergraduate programs in the School of Public and Environmental Affairs. Her area of interest include mediation, negotiation, alternative dispute resolution, and public input processes.
