Following centuries of interethnic and interfaith conflict in Tatarstan, spiritual leaders of the Muslim Tatar and Orthodox Christian Russian communities have recently collaborated to address the impact of state-sponsored atheism during seven decades of Soviet power. This presentation will examine the foremost problems confronting the followers of both religions in contemporary Tatarstan.

Leyla Almazova is Associate Professor of Religious Studies and Islamic Studies in the Institute of International Relations at Kazan’ Federal University.

Sponsors: Russian and East European Institute, Inner Asian and Uralic National Resource Center, Sinor Research Institute for Inner Asian Studies

Persons with disabilities who wish to attend the lecture and would like to request assistance should contact the REEI office (812-855-7309 or reei@indiana.edu)