This speaker will discuss research that employed word association surveys to uncover perceptions of the United States on the part of Russian students.

Ekaterina Levko is Associate Professor of English at the Saint Petersburg University of Humanities and Social Sciences. As a Fulbright visiting scholar at Indiana University-Bloomington since August, 2013, she has been working with faculty in the Department of American Studies to enhance the teaching of American culture at her home institution.

Sponsor: Russian and East European Institute

Persons with disabilities who wish to attend the lecture and would like to request assistance should contact the REEI office (812-855-7309 or reei@indiana.edu)