Canadian Slavonic Papers/Revue canadienne des slavistes invites contributions to a special section to mark the awarding of the 2015 Nobel Prize for Literature to Belarusian writer Svetlana Alexievich. We invite articles from a range of disciplines that explore the author, her oeuvre, and her milieu. Among other topics, explorations of creative non-fiction in the Soviet and post-Soviet space, of the female voice, of oral history, of the intellectual and social history of Soviet and Belarusian writers, or of important themes in Alexievich’s work would be welcome. The issue aims to be multidisciplinary and interdisciplinary.

Manuscripts may be in English or French. The normal peer-review process will apply. Please consult the journal’s website for our submission and style guidelines:

Authors who submit papers must become members of the Canadian Association of Slavists (CAS).

Deadlines: Expression of intent to submit: 30 April 2016. Final Paper with abstract: 30 November 2016. Send submissions by e-mail to the Editor, Prof. Heather Coleman: hcoleman@ualberta.ca

Canadian Slavonic Papers/Revue canadienne des slavistes, founded in 1956, is a quarterly, interdisciplinary journal of the Canadian Association of Slavists, publishing in English and French. It is devoted to problems of Central and Eastern Europe. It is a forum for scholars from a range of disciplines: language and linguistics, literature, history, political science, sociology, economics, anthropology, geography, philosophy, and the arts. hcoleman@ualberta.ca
