This talk will address recent history of direct democratic action in former Yugoslavia, pinpointing challenges to building new social movements following the 2014 protests in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Mr. Vučkovac will draw on both personal involvement in several groups which coalesced after the protests, as well as his experiences in establishing a social center in Banja Luka shortly thereafter.

Zoran Vučkovac holds an MA in Cultural Studies from University of Alberta and a BA from University of Banja Luka. He is currently working on BASOC: Banja Luka Social Center, a project focused on memory politics, workers’ rights, social justice, and gender/LGBTQ politics.
