Refugees have permeated European history. The receiving societies have almost always benefited. But why were they welcomed in some periods and rejected in others (now)? This talk charts the historical trajectory of refuge and refugees in modern Europe up to the current “crisis,” and discusses the limits of international humanitarianism.

Wednesday, April 10
4 pm
IMU Oak Room

Prof. Philipp Ther
(NYU/Univ. of Vienna)

Author of Europe Since 1989 (2016), his book on refugees will be published in English by Princeton University Press later this year.

Sponsored by Russian & East European Institute, Institute for European Studies, History and International Studies Departments