Anti-Genderism as Global Phenomenon:
Brazil, Hungary, Poland, Romania

Tuesday, April 2, 2:30-4:30
Persimmon Room
Indiana Memorial Union

What do Viktor Orban and Jair Bolsonaro have in common? Why does the Catholic Church there and in Poland consider “gender ideology” a threat to society? Why do some politicians in these countries depict feminism as a foreign conspiracy? These and other questions about struggle for gender justice around globe are the starting point of a lively dialogue among this panel of experts: Maria Bucur (Indiana University, gender studies and history); Eva Fodor (Central European University, Budapest, gender studies); Agnieszka Graff (University of Warsaw, American studies); Bryan Pitts (Indiana University, CLACS); and Colin Johnson, moderator (Indiana University, gender studies).

We would like to thank the College of Arts and Sciences, Gender Studies, Polish Studies, REEI, CLACS, and CEUS for their support for this event.
