Swedish fashion is today mainly associated with chains like H&M and fashionable denim wear. Already in the 1960s Swedish designers were launched in the US, a phenomenon that is almost forgotten today in Sweden and internationally. This lecture will address ideas about “Swedishness” in Swedish fashion, looking at examples from 1880s reform dress, the unisex jumpsuits of the 1960s, as well as today’s young designers.

Patrik Steorn is a lecturer at the Centre for Fashion Studies at Stockholm University with research on visual culture, fashion studies, and gender and queer studies. He is currently a Fulbright Fellow at CUNY.