50 years after “Abbey Road,” the Beatles’ final album
We will celebrate the timeless music created in just seven short years in Abbey Road Studios.

Glenn Gass is a Provost Professor of Music at Indiana University, where he developed a series of courses on the history of rock and popular music, including historical survey courses and courses devoted exclusively to the Music of the Beatles and the Music of Bob Dylan. His courses on rock and pop music were the first to be offered through a music school and are now the longest-running courses of their kind in the world. Gass has been the recipient of the Herman B Wells Lifetime Achievement Award, the IU Sylvia Bowman Distinguished Teaching Award, the IU Student Alumni Association Award, the Society of Professional Journalists Brown Derby Award and the winner of the "Best Professor at Indiana University" and other teaching awards and honors. Glenn and his wife, Julie, have two sons, Julian and Mathew, who were born on John Lennon’s birthday.
